Creative suggestions that lead to profound results

By Katy Koontz

Jill Angelo's Sacred Space takes you on a sensory journey through the home that your inner self has always longed to create, while giving you all the direction you need to make those visions reality. Jill emphasizes that making your space sacred isn't about spending a lot of money. It's about self-discovery and deliberate intention--a combination that virtually guarantees you will fall in love with your own creation. Jill's suggestions are truly engaging and her perspective is unique. The book is definitely a fun and thoughtful read. One particularly brilliant touch is that every chapter ends with a list of "Things You Can Do Today," which invites you to actually do something (that's relatively simple), not just read about doing something. In short, this book makes the goal of creating a sacred space not only attractive but also absolutely attainable.

Subtle, Powerful Sacred Energies

By Jackie Robinson

What I love about Jill's book is that she mingles the sacred with the physical. With each perspective on how we relate to our homes, to our lives, we are guided into a deeper contemplative space. I browsed through this book upon first receiving it several months ago, reading the highlights. I'm now pacing myself through each chapter, taking time to allow the energies to ruminate and make their way into my internal awareness. As I do, I feel those vibrations moving out into my home and environment. The shifts are subtle, but potent. I'll be keeping this as one of those books I can pick up at any moment, open to a page and feel something inspired.
