Save your time and money

By Gail Christian

This was not at all what I expected. I thought it would be humorous. No, no, no, no, no! It was tedious and boring. Almost from the first page I wanted to stop reading, but I kept thinking it simply HAD to get better. It didn't until the very last page.

The rider on the bus can't remember something so he can't concentrate on reading during his commute to work today. Since he can't read, decides to observe his fellow passengers and (joy oh joy) tell us all his negative thoughts for each person riding with him today.

I didn't like this at all except for the ending. However, I don't think the ending justified the time spent reading the first 10 or 11 pages. Do yourself a favor and skip this one!

nice read

By Alexandra L.

It's just as short it needs to be to finish it while commuting, just as the main character of the story. I got hooked by the fine analyze he's doing over the fellow commuters and it's quite funny to notice how we all are pretty much the same.

The gem is at the final.
